Louvre Museum. The sculpture was later reproduced in marble, bronze and plaster. The sophisticated composition of this statue and the intense emotion are characteristic of Hellenistic Greek art (from 323 to 31 BC). The work appears alive in its extraordinary features, its muscles, its position, its gaze, its bodily veins. The sculptor makes the work true with a sublime mastery of telling the sculpture in his own way, when I look at it I can't find a way to explain the energy it releases. This inextricable mixture of arms and legs of the two characters is simply amazing.

(Anonymous praise) The history of this group is precisely described in the book: "For the love of the Antique" by Francis Haskell and Nicholas Penny, Hachette edition, page 271.
