Description

Oil on canvas representing "the dance", signed Hélène Azenor, born in Paris on June 21, 1910 and died in the same city on March 12, 2010, is a French painter, engraver and illustrator. Hélène Azenor paints works influenced by the symbolists, using a palette supported by many layers of rich lacquers. She illustrates books, including "The Fall of the House of Usher" by Edgar Allan Poe and "A Season in Hell" by Arthur Rimbaud. From 1966, she became interested in the representation of modern life, painting views of cities and their surroundings. His works are exhibited at the Salon des Indépendants from 1925. The painting that we present corresponds to his first period, a work of youth which is a perfect example of his work with regard to the importance given to color and
