Description

Pleasant Manche country buffet from the Louis XIV period, from the end of the 17th century. The patina is very old but perhaps a little later (18th-early 19th centuries). The fir panels are rectangular and the uprights are straight. This piece of furniture is placed on four small straight but curved surface-mounted legs. The moldings are bold and the wood nicely carved. This "one-door" country sideboard opens onto two "natural" shelves. Above, an elegant drawer. The key is missing. Nice curve of the keyholes. The furniture is in "house condition". It could benefit from a small restoration to restore its quality. Small in size, this sideboard called "bottom of cabinet" is easy to integrate into a rustic kitchen or dining room. The interior is elegant and deep enough to accommodate cutlery, crockery or table
