Description

A luxury saber intended for officers of troops in horseback uniform from the consular period and of which the most luxurious specimens come from Boutet's workshops in Versailles, it marks a prosperous and creative stage in the history of the bladed weapon where the aesthetic research is never developed to the detriment of the murderous nature of the object which has the inimitable style of the productions offered at the Versailles Manufacture store, the work is beautiful but nevertheless remains the effective tool of the military, sometimes awarded as a national reward or simply offered to a superior or staff officer, this copy is unattributed.

Hungarian-style mount in gilded brass enriched with burin engraving with strong lugs distinguished by the crooked cap whose junction
