Description

There are paintings like that, we don't really know if we like them or if they scare us, sometimes both, this one is surprising because of the power of the painted character and his discreet smile.

The black and white habit of this type is found in the 16th and 17th as shown in the penultimate photo in a painting by the mother of François 1er, Louise de Savoie. The androgynous side is also very interesting.

Painted on canvas probably in the 17th century, restored re-canvas, as visible in the last photo.

Very endearing painting from our personal collection.

Delivery included by chronopost for France and Europe.

Others 50EUR.
