Description

Superb skeleton clock from the end of the 19th century, signed and patented by the famous watchmaker Eugène Farcot. This rare piece features an apparent movement, displayed under a glass dome that highlights its ingenious mechanism.

The pendulum is decorated with a cherub (putti) sitting on a swing. With each oscillation of the pendulum, the cherub simulates a swinging movement, bringing a touch of charm and dynamism to this unique clock.

The whole thing rests on a wooden base, in very good general condition. The mechanism works perfectly, proof of the exceptional quality of Eugène Farcot's work.

It is important to note a crack in the glass dome, which affects neither the operation nor the beauty
