with the bronze protector of the city, in the other.

The delicate drawing with which the artist has placed the color spots gives a romantic and dreamy vision, preserved by time, of the Venetian architecture.

The practice of portraying Venetian views, begun in modern times on the territory, spread throughout the European context thanks to the practice of Grand Tour. The subtlety of the landscape in miniaturising the smallest detail, for the sake of authenticity and antique taste, is also present in this pair of watercolors, in which the artist has not spared to return even the intricate gothicismi of Palazzo Ducale, along with the careful rhythmic succession of arches and capitals. The unmistakable beauty of Venice is naturally reflected in the painter's technical expertise, masterfully using the technique of watercolor.
