Description

Antique leather cordite bucket, royal navy ammunition carrier, UK coat of arms. United Kingdom 19th century Height 38 cm. Height with handle 48 cm. Diameter 16 cm. Good general condition with traces of use, visible in the photos. Cordite buckets were used by the British Navy to transport cordite, a propellant used to replace gunpowder. Due to their purpose, cordite buckets were constructed with specific materials: cork, fabric and leather. Leather was used on the outside to protect the explosive from water damage and was glued to the cork, which is a fire resistant material. Inside, the cap was covered with canvas to seal the cap. Originally, the bucket would have had a lid. The buckets were gripped and moved using the handle fixed by copper rivets. This particular item is in good condition,
