the earthenware factory and turned to the workshops of Mr. Adelphe MÜLLER. He rented two rooms from him to set up on the site of the BAUER Confection building. In 1866, he was the official supplier to the Tuileries Palace. Many prestigious pieces and services came out of the Raon kilns, decorated and then signed "E. Gallé Raon". The GALLE family owned a kiln and a ceramic decoration workshop in Raon until 1898. If earthenware was the origin of Émile Gallé's research, it was in glassmaking that he revealed his genius: marquetry on glass, cameo glass, multi-layer blown glass. GALLE Émile thus contributed, offered gifts to personalities: in 1892, a vase was offered as a present to the wife of President CARNOT then in 1893 on the occasion of the passage of the Russian squadron in Nancy, the Tsar received a Gallé table. The last creations of the MÜLLER earthenware factory date from 1898, shortly before the definitive cessation of production.
