

Michel Van De Velde 'marine Metamorphosis' Realistic And Fantastic Painting, Oil On Canvas

Description

Large painting mixing mysticism and realism, on a blue background evoking the depths of the sea. It illustrates the metamorphosis of a man into a shell, probably a mussel. The face, like a mask, is transformed while the shoulder gradually freezes to adopt the appearance of a shell, revealing only a few elements of the body, barely realistic. Remarkable for its technique and quality, this work brings the painter's imagination to life in a canvas imbued with fantasy. This work was presented in 1993 at the Galerie Liehrmann in Liège, alongside creations by two other artists, De Vos and Le Moul. This painting, the centerpiece of the exhibition, appeared on the official poster of the event (see images). Michel Van de Velde is known for his mystical work, a mixture of people and the animal world. A strong expression where the intrigues of the world are rendered in an exciting way, a very beautiful work, deeply moving. The artist presents himself as a master of realism, with an extraordinary technical talent. He makes his subjects hover on the edge of metamorphosis, giving the impression of attending a mythical moment. Biography: VAN DE VELDE, Michel (Ixelles, 1945) Painter.
