eighteenth-century Neapolitan porcelain, the production environments and their history, whether it was Capodimonte or Naples, had left their mark. The first to take advantage of it was the prestigious Ginori factory, at the hands of Carlo Leopoldo (very close to the Neapolitan city as his father Lorenzo had been) who already in 1821 purchased the molds of Capodimonte and the Real Fabbrica Ferdinanda, including the right to use the crowned N as the brand. The brand, however, was used by the Florentine house
