styles, it can also be noted that many of his creations were made using a foreign technique. Most of his Louis XV and Louis XVI furniture, with its classical forms and finely chiseled bronze frames, were covered in black and gold varnish with Chinese decorations of pagodas and lake landscapes. Despite producing a large amount of high-quality furniture, Rubestuck ended his life miserably and without an heir; the small amount of his estate was given to the King by "right of windfall".
