Description

Silk painting mounted in a traditional Japanese scroll, called kakejiku. The artist, Kozan Yoshitsugu (1879-1957), depicted koi carp in a very elegant and delicate way. Kakejiku painting scrolls are a traditional Japanese support adapted to their interior. In the reception room, there is an alcove (tokonoma) facing the guest of honor.

Depending on the season, the event or the guest, the host chooses a kakejiku to hang in the tokonoma, as well as a floral arrangement and a sculpture (okimono). The theme of koi carp is a classic subject of Japanese painting. Representing strength and perseverance. Koi carp paintings are usually exhibited for Boys' Day on May 5. Japan, circa 1940, 182.5 x 53.5 cm (kakejiku) and 113.5 x 41.5 cm.
