Description

This plaster figurine is perhaps one sold at the Louvre. It has a black patina and red eyes, and represents the Falcon god Horus, one of the oldest Egyptian deities. The item is very decorative and geometric.

Condition-wise, there are some scuffs, scratches, paint loss, and chips on the beak and around the base (all visible in the photos), as well as small chips on the corners of the base. However, this figurine remains in generally acceptable condition.

Our numerous photos allow you to appreciate the quality of the object. Please examine the photos carefully.
