Description

Once upon a time, there was a coffee brand that, like the others, decided to publish a very large advertising box. The company in Schuybroeck Hobboken, near Antwerp, specialized in publishing chromolithographed metal advertising boxes. This one first sat in the shop window, then had to give way and ended up being used as an umbrella stand near the entrance. It still bears the marks of the foot cuts that the rascals were sure to give it "without meaning to", but it was amusing because it resonated. And then, it was certain that the grocer would give them her disapproving look: that was very amusing...
