Description

Throughout Europe, the 19th century saw the rise of the reign of a bourgeoisie anxious to appropriate the codes of an aristocracy that it always envied but never said so! In France, these families, strong in their economic power, adorned their opulent houses and apartments with furniture and objects of refined taste such as bronze and gilt bronze andirons in the Louis XV style. Above all, the bronzes of Vienna won a triumph all over Europe. Here, the windings of the andirons serve as branches for charming parrots, a refined production from Vienna, a memory of the pet birds of Versailles and those which delighted all good families in the 19th century. These andirons are still in perfect condition.
