Description

Here is a unique piece, a large old bowl (or decanter) blown and shaped by hand.

It is estimated at 8 hours the working time for one person to shape at the time this piece of absolutely unique and exceptional shape coming from a curiosity cabinet. This type of object can be found in early chemistry laboratories and entomology cabinets, we have dated it to the 19th century but it could just as well have been blown earlier with its large lip at the top, its archaic shape and its small defects.

A surprising and rather thick piece (5 to 7 mm ?)
