Description

Charming 18th century box in enamelled copper; on the lid we can discover a decor of a gallant scene where we see two characters, a young man seems busy seducing his young lady by playing a little romantic tune with his lute.

The scene takes place at the edge of a pond against a background of a wooded park embellished with columnar architecture surmounted by a monumental vase.

The scenery of various landscapes with fantasy architectures, lakes, boats and characters occupy all the sides of this pretty old box.

It is a beautiful witness object of the Enlightenment but which nevertheless presents the stigmata of the pangs of time even of it remains a beautiful "document" of this time. Chips of enamel and cracks of this one are to
