Description

Carved from hardwood, this elegant club could serve both as a weapon and as a votive object. The traditional geometric drawing in the shape of an elongated diamond is marked on its diagonals with a sparse cross, all achieved by the cutting of the wood of the weapon. This object with a certain look ends with a semi-cylindrical grip. This "supe" club as it is called in this region is highlighted by the brown and red nuances of its shiny patina which gives this object a unique cachet and an elegance all its own.
